===== The most common epidermal lesion is melanocytic nevus, which is a benign cutaneous lesion arising from the proliferation and differentiation of melanocytes. It may occur at any age, however, it commonly appears at birth, and is usually distributed throughout the entire skin. A melanocytic nevus with a diameter of >1.0 cm is called Clark level IV nevus.

These melanocytic nevi are classified into three types based on their clinical and histopathologic features. This classification is a clinical criteria based on the presence of any of the three following features: [B1]-[B3] (a) a junctional activity nevus, (b) a compound nevus, and (c) a dermal nevus. A junctional activity nevus is characterized by junctional hyperpigmentation and proliferation of melanocytes at the dermoepidermal junction. A compound nevus is a combination of junctional activity nevi and dermal nevi. Dermal nevi are characterized by melanocytes in the dermis without junctional activity. The melanocytes have a round-oval shape. We present a case of junctional activity nevus with dermal nevi that was successfully removed by plastic surgery without a radical skin excision. CASE REPORT ===== An 11-

Adeko Software. 23,Â .Jack had gotten up to stand in front of the mirror above the fireplace, contemplating the little problem with his hair. The small curl of black hair on the back of his head. That's the thing about Jack. No matter how often he changed the hairstyle, it still never quite looked right.

So he'd been considering it for a while now, but what he really wanted to do was get it cut. All the girls at school seemed to have those perfect long sleek shapes and it made him feel so out-of-date. But as soon as he started talking about it to Mrs. Blanchfield, she looked at him like he was from another planet and decided that his hair was just fine. And he knew it was because he'd always been the black sheep of the family, even with his brothers and sisters. But this year he was going to be the one to get himself a nice new hair cut. After his mother died, he'd known he had to be even more careful. More aware. He was the last man to know, that's how he'd always thought. It was going to be a long road, but his luck had changed. He'd met the girl of his dreams. And when he'd gotten up this morning, he'd been certain that she knew he'd had the perfect haircut coming for him. What do you know? She liked it. He'd known he had to accept it, but the rest of the day had been a rollercoaster, more than he could have expected. And then there was the little issue of when to tell Mrs. Blanchfield. Especially because he'd met her the afternoon before. So he'd thought about it all day. But the real problem was that he'd had to give it some thought himself. It's one thing having to think of the perfect time to tell Mrs. Blanchfield. But it's a totally different one being the one to make the choice. As if she could read his thoughts, Eloise came around the corner of the hallway. She stopped and smiled at him. "Hey, Jack. What's up?" "What do you think of my hair?" "It's nice. You look happy." Jack shrugged. He couldn't help it.
