Although the region is about 3 degrees west of the equator, the sun rises as high as 12 degrees above the horizon and the sun sets as low as 6 degrees below the horizon. The equatorial region is known as the Tropical Region, which contains the world's most volatile weather. The Tropics are also sometimes referred to as the "steppe belt." The equatorial zone is also known as the Equator. A band of dense ozone surrounding the Equator is called the Tropopause. The Highest Altitude The highest altitude at which air is present in the Troposphere is 3, 100 kilometers in the case of the tropical zone. The lowest altitude at which air is present in the Troposphere is called the ground level. The Troposphere is the region of the atmosphere found from about 10 to 100 kilometers above the ground level. The Troposphere is about 5,000 kilometers wide. The Troposphere is divided into three distinct layers. The upper most layer is the Tropopause. The lowest layer is the Earth's surface called ground level. The Mid-Air Region Tropopause Mid-Air Layer Atmosphere The Mid-Air Region is located between the Tropopause and the bottom of the Troposphere. The mid-air layer is 2,000 kilometers wide. The Mid-Air Region extends up to 30,000 kilometers from the Earth's surface. The Mid-Air Region is the location where meteors enter the atmosphere. The location where meteors enter the atmosphere is called the Mesosphere. How is the Climate of the Tropics Different from Other Regions? The Tropics are cold because the air is unable to efficiently transport heat toward the surface. The Tropics are windy because air has a high velocity in the Tropics. The Tropics have intense rainfall. This is due to the warm temperature of the air. The Tropics have lesser mass circulation because of their shape and location. The HurricaneQ: Inconsistent dates and times in upserted data I have a table in MYSQL that keeps time and date info when importing data. You can use the Eyedropper tool to take a color sample. Selecting the Eyedropper tool (from the Tools panel), click to activate it, and then click to choose a color from the screen. Your selection is displayed, ready to be pasted into an image. Find out how to crop or size images for your print or Web page. Check out Chapter 6 to learn how to sharpen and reduce noise, or use the Crop tool to zoom in on specific areas of an image. Using the Paint Bucket tool, you can fill, erase, and paint areas of an image. You can even paste images from the Clipboard into your document or photo. The Rectangular Marquee tool lets you cut out parts of an image to use elsewhere. Use the Lasso tool (refer to Chapter 3) to select the path you want to cut out. Then select the Rectangular Marquee tool and click to crop the area. Open dialog boxes with FileMaker Pro or Adobe LiveCycle for e-mailing images to people who can't view their documents in their browser. From the File menu, choose Open and select a file. Use Photoshop's Layer window to organize your images. Click the up or down arrow next to a layer name to make that layer hidden or visible. To apply a layer style to an image, click the Layer menu at the top of the Layers panel and choose the style you want. The style appears as a drop-down list that you can select from. Use the Float and Lock dialog boxes to apply specific settings to an object in an image. The Float box, which appears when you right-click (Control-click on a Mac) a layer, lets you set the layer's z-index and visibility. Use the Lock box to display or hide that layer in your Layers panel. Click an image to see a history of the most recent edits to that file. Rotate an image in Photoshop by holding down the Shift key and pressing the Right or Left arrow keys. If you want to rotate the image while keeping it centered in the image window, hold down the Shift key and press the Up or Down arrow keys. Choose Filter > Pixelate > Adaptive (see Figure 7-3). As the filter runs, you can see how well it matches the image. Drag the slider to modify the size of the affected area. You can quickly remove the effect by clicking a Color Pick
