And the process should repeat until all users are available. A: It seems that your users are basically locked out of Windows. If you ran the batch as administrator, you could have the batch delete the HKLM\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Runbox, but you'll have to run it with administrative privilege. Assuming your users are not locked out of Windows, they just have locked out of the interface, because you ran the batch with administrative privilege. Otherwise they might just need to restart their computer. This won't fix what happened, but at least the problem won't happen again, just in case. A: If they're locked out, there's not much you can do to remedy the issue. They need to run the command prompt as admin and attempt to deauthorize the machine. Once they do so, you can change the permissions to the user back to normal. If you're curious as to why the user is locked out, there is a document located at: HKLM\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\run\box\ and there will be a subkey for each user. It's the SubkeyName.
