[Treatment of chronic pain in elderly patients with anticonvulsants]. Due to the reduction of the efficacy of the pain treatment in patients above the age of 60, it is necessary to look for other alternatives for the treatment of chronic pain in this population. The effectiveness of anticonvulsants in the treatment of chronic pain remains to be demonstrated. The randomized double-blind placebo-controlled trial was conducted in 40 patients with various forms of chronic pain (cancer, inflammatory arthrosis, and postoperative pain). The effectiveness of anticonvulsants was tested against placebo. The main criterion for the efficacy of the therapy was pain intensity on the visual analog scale (VAS) in the first 3 months and later. The pain intensity reduction in the first 3 months was significantly more evident in the group of patients receiving anticonvulsants, than in the group of patients receiving placebo ($p = 0.001$). The pain reduction was also maintained in the group of patients receiving anticonvulsants as compared with the placebo during the 3-month observation period ($p = 0.005$). The use of anticonvulsants in the treatment of chronic pain in elderly patients is effective and safe.

It affects 1/5000 newborns. Medical and surgical treatments must be established before birth. Exorzine are a series of experimental indie-rock band collaborations of keyboardists Sean Booth and Andrew McPhee. History Andrew McPhee first met Sean Booth back in 1989. They met both at Glasgow University during their undergraduate studies. Booth was studying Sound Art and McPhee was studying Sound Engineering. They came to an agreement to share a table at a pub called the Brockwell Tavern. Soon, McPhee and Booth were writing music together. They began to record albums and mix them with beats and samples from the cutting edge of tribal house music. Over the years they have collaborated with each other on several musical projects. Those band efforts, Jarbo and Erik & Joshua remain rare examples of the experimental music made by both of them. In 2006 Sean Booth and Andrew McPhee released their sixth collaboration album "Music for Broken Sleep" as Exorzine. On August 7, 2006 the two musicians were featured together in a joint interview on BBC online magazine Creemers. In November 2006 the duo were invited to play on the final night of John Peel's Climax Piano pop Night at the Royal Festival Hall, London. This was the first time that both Sean Booth and Andrew McPhee had performed together live since 1991. In early 2010 Booth and McPhee made a U.S. tour, with J. Robbins, facing extensive cyber attacks on their sites. Their debut album Through a Glass Peachy - part one was released on 27 July 2007 on Ajna. It was released worldwide in the digital download format, and as a physical copy limited to 1,000 hand numbered copies. The album was available to download in a pre-order bundles for the 1st time ever. In May 2009 Exorzine released the album Part 2 of Through a Glass Peachy. This time they did not partner with Ajna Records but with the new experimental record label Friction Resonance. This made the collaboration with a new partner, English label the Equal Vision Records. In November 2009 both albums were presented as a box set including the special 7" split single as encore track. Again both albums were limited to

1,000 individually numbered copies. In March 2010 the band announced a 3-day conference held in Italy, named Exorzine Horizon 2010. The first half of their experimental live album Exorzine Horizon 2010 was recorded in Italy in February 2010, three of
