Q: No valid BlackBerry.cod file to include When trying to build a C++ application for the 8900 I get the error No valid BlackBerry.cod file to include in the BlackBerry toolchain This is a major issue as I already have the 9030 version of the SDK and cannot swap them around. A google search has revealed several methods for getting around the problem, none of which are working for me. The solutions most commonly mention are: Making a new project Using an earlier version of the SDK - as with version 5 I'm not allowed to use the latest Rebuilding the project from scratch None of these solutions work. I have no project.cs or any of the other main files and trying to create a new project causes a similar error. My computer - Windows XP, version 2002 and software updates A: Mostly what is missing from my question is the presence of some corrupt files. I eventually tracked down where the problem was coming from. Simply clean your BlackBerry SDK and re-install it. It will find the most up to date SDK that it can, without bothering with the corrupt version. Q: Max local gradient norm in NLP This is a fairly weak and potentially general question. I have become curious about NLP since I encountered it in [1]. What are good bounds for $\|L_{\max}(f)\|$ of local optimal points of a small function $f: E \times E \rightarrow \mathbb{R}$ (in this case $E = \mathbb{R}^3$ and f is the square-norm). Let's assume that we have a noise-free function f . Let's say that f has 3 local minimums, the global minimum, and that the global minimum f is not reached. Then I would expect that $\max(\|d^2f/dx^2\|)$ is proportional to $\|d^2f/dx^2\|$, which, as I understand it, is proportional to f -magnitude. Similarly, I would expect that $\max(\|d^2f/dy^2\|)$ is proportional to $\|d^2f/dy^2\|$, which, as I understand it, is proportional to f -magnitude. Now the question is: 1) Which norm may be used to bound the average value of the norm of the derivative at local maxima and minima? 2) Could you construct a function f such that $\max(\|d^2f/dx^2\|)$

Q: Order of transactions in a transaction system using several functions I'm doing a poker game with sql (pokerpenguin). A table with a deck of cards and a table with a database with the players' cards. Every time a player pulls an Ace I add the current value of the table to the player's table. An Ace is worth 21. I'm using the current value of the player's table because when the player pulls the Ace I don't need to add another value to the table (personally, if I had to add to the table every time I draw the Ace that would look a bit "ugly") The problem is that this procedure is only every time one player pulls an Ace and the current value of the table is below 21 I add the current value of the table to the player's table. This means that after one player pulls a big Ace I need to add the value of a card to the player table and then the table and the player table can diverge and add values if someone else pulls an Ace (which usually means that the player pulls a value from the table that is lower than 21). My question is: how do I guarantee that once a player has pulled an Ace that I add the values of that player's table to the player table so that I don't have to add again every time a player pulls an Ace? Something like this: update table as x set x.val = (select if (y.val > 21) from table y) from table x where x.card = 'Ace' A: Use INSERT INTO... SELECT...: INSERT INTO table (card, val) SELECT 'Ace', 21 FROM table WHERE val < 21 UPDATE table t SET t.val = 21 FROM table t WHERE t.card = 'Ace' AND t.val < 21 While the former is best for the database, the latter has the advantage that it can be performed in a single statement. In Postgres, there is no SET... FROM... clause. The latter would be syntax like this: INSERT INTO table (card, val) SELECT 'Ace', 21 FROM table WHERE val < 21 RETURNING table.*, 21 AS val See
