Mapping the cost of care to identify areas of need of elderly patients: A multi-disciplinary approach. the increasing health care costs in recent years are of great concern to the public and to health care professionals. One way to identify areas of high cost is to establish a cost-to-charge ratio (CCR) for each diagnosis in a particular institution. This study aims to analyze whether the combined use of two indicators, the CCR and the days of hospitalization, can assist health care decision making. this is a descriptive study of a sample of elderly patients (≥ 65 years) in a teaching hospital in the interior region of Brazil. We calculated the average daily cost per hospitalization, the CCR and the number of days of hospitalization to evaluate the direct and indirect cost per hospitalization day. of the 1,300 patients, 829 (63.2%) were female. The average daily cost, the CCR and the number of days of hospitalization were approximately BRL 917 (USD 245.10), 2.5 (1.9-3.5) and 8 (7-10), respectively. The mean cost per patient per day was R$ 143 (USD 41.00). The cost per day increased with CCR and the number of days. Most patients (71.2%) had only one diagnosis. when compared with other studies, most of the costs were borne by the health service, which was also the largest component in the total average cost per patient. There was no association among patient characteristics and the distribution of costs. The results presented support the use of this approach as a reference method to identify areas of need that require further investigations to facilitate health care decision making.
