A system is not worth much unless it can be used to serve the people. Governments are no different, they are people, just people with a public duty to serve. That we the people are capable of making our own mistakes is a lesson we should learn in years past. We should always be alert to do the best we can and then when the majority choose wrong we have a right to change. I view the adage "There are no absolute statements" as fitting when it comes to politics. There is always more than one truth when it comes to government. There are many different ways to get to the same destination. That said, it

Different types of businesses such as retail, service, non-profit, and manufacturing operate differently. The corporate management as well as the team leaders should be aware of each of these types and how they can operate and run an efficient business. To understand different types of businesses and how they operate, one must learn about the basic differences among them. Retail Retail is a type of business that provides goods and services directly to the customer without going through wholesalers or retailers. The term retail refers to any kind of business for which the customer pays directly for the goods or services offered. Retail businesses can be divided into two categories: Consumer-operated: In consumer-operated businesses, an individual is purchasing goods or services from a store or online and paying the total amount right after purchase. Online shopping allows customers to carry out transactions anytime, anywhere and pay online without leaving the comfort of their home or office. Employer-operated: In employer-operated businesses, workers are paid by an employer and the employer pays a third party or wholesaler directly for the products or services that employees provide. An employer-operated business may have any type of products or services. Examples include manufacturing (
