BGPv4 provides the foundational layer of a

Network Address Translation (NAT) solution, which allows multiple network devices to have a common IP addressing scheme without requiring a centralized network device. By defining the rules that should apply for the flow of data packets through the network, each router acts as a broker and provides common Layer 2 connectivity for each node on the path. Media playback is unsupported on your device Media caption BBC's David Willis looks at the way that the Lake District has become a popular area for sports spectators Glastonbury is back, and this year's festival has already found its own unique way of attracting thousands of visitors. The 2018 music festival was due to take place in June, but organisers have moved it to the end of August to avoid too much rain. Not only are Glastonbury tickets now completely sold out, there are no tents left standing in the grounds - people are now staying in the local area. It makes sense if you are a marketer keen on maximising any publicity for a product, and it is not just music festivals that are a good example. In the Lake District, the Snowdonia National Park and other such iconic locations, high quality, well-maintained public parks are a huge draw. All of them are doing their bit for the local economy - so it is not surprising that the people who live there are trying to capitalise on their new found fame. In the Lake District, owned by the National Trust, there are more than 200 bed and breakfasts (B&Bs) set in more than 3,000 houses in one of the most scenic locations in the UK. The estate agents providing the properties are recommending properties to festival goers looking for something different to stay in. "Glastonbury is a great brand and Glastonbury weekend is when people have an opportunity to get into the Lake District," said Mick Barlow, of Oliver and Barratt. "Certainly during the festival there will be a lot of demand from people to find somewhere to stay in the Lake District and I think that is something that is worth promoting." 'These are the people
