. . As follows from the law of conservation of mass, any attempt to increase the mass of a body by changing its internal structure, i.e., by means of chemical or physical transformations, leads to a decrease in the total mass of the body, to its radioactive decay. During radioactive decay, on average, about 100 decays occur during the year. The energy released during the decay of the K. century. in the form of kinetic energy, can be transformed into heat.
