Here, we investigate the expression of a new matrilysin/lymphangiogenetic factor (PAN-MAT) and the possible implications of this on the development of human gastric cancer. PAN-MAT is a human member of the family of multidomain non-conventional MMPs (MMPS-A). It is structurally characterized by a novel N-terminal PAN/PED domain. The protein is overexpressed in lysates of different tumor cell lines as well as in tumor samples, in particular from malignant human gastric tumors. Because of its strong expression in human gastric cancer cells, PAN-MAT expression in biopsies of 52 gastric tumors including 32 gastric adenocarcinomas and 20 metastatic tumors was evaluated by immunohistochemistry. The staining was scored in two separate groups: separately, the staining patterns and intensities in epithelial cells and stroma cells; together, the epithelial PAN-MAT expression and the stromal staining index (SI). The results of the first analysis revealed a significantly different SI ($P < 0.001$) in the two groups. A significant difference in PAN-MAT staining patterns and intensities could only be detected in the analysis of the two stromal cells ($P = 0.048$). In contrast, the results of the second analysis revealed a different SI ($P = 0.03$) for the two groups, but no differences in PAN-MAT
